

Join us for this inspiring workshop on Thursday, April 7

Faith and values in the marketplace

Christians are called to be faithful stewards – including in our business lives. Join us for this opportunity to reflect on your own business practices, and to learn how Christian principles might be better realized.

Presenters and topics:

- John D. Roth, historian and author: Paying it forward – stewardship in the Anabaptist tradition
The gifts of wealth, time and talents that God has generously given us are meant to be shared – joyfully and freely – with those around us. The Anabaptist tradition has long taught that stewardship is one way of sharing the Good News ... and in the process, we ourselves are blessed.
- David Kline, farmer and naturalist: A steward of prosperity
People of faith are immersed in the prosperity of our community. The opportunities to be good stewards require serious conversation about issues that impact us, our family, the church and our community.
- Bill Mullet, business owner and minister: Employment with a purpose
Employers often say staff members are their greatest asset, but what components go into making this a reality so the results include buy-in, teamwork, creativity, efficiency and job satisfaction?

There also will be a panel discussion and time for your questions. Panelists include: David King, Malone University; Howard Miller Jr., Hartville Hardware; and Daniel Wengerd, Pioneer Equipment.
